

MOM WAS A TRUMP SUPPORTER

INT. LOCAL COMMUNITY CENTER

A group of men and women sit in a circle, clearly attending some kind of support group. One woman, ANNIE, begins to speak.

ANNIE:
My name's Annie.

SUPPORT GROUP:
Hello Annie.

ANNIE:
My mother died a week ago. She was private a woman. And she wasn't altogether... "there" at the end.

INT. FUNERAL HOME

A woman in her mid-sixties lies in a casket. Annie is standing behind the pulpit, giving a eulogy.

ANNIE:
It's heartening to see so many strange faces here today. I know my mother would be touched.

Out in the pews, we see a a conspicuous number of people wearing red baseball caps. They read "MAKE AMERICA GREAT AGAIN."

Annie's face changes as realization sets in. A bead of sweat trickles down her forehead.

EXT. PARKING LOT.

ANNIE (V.O.):
She had private rituals, private friends.

ANNIE sits in the driver's seat of her car. A woman, JOAN, approaches her window.

JOAN:
Annie?

ANNIE:

Yes?

JOAN:

I recognize you from your mother.
She used to come over to my place to watch FOX & Friends.

ANNIE (SHOCKED):

What? There's no way she watched that show.

JOAN ignores the comment.

JOAN:

You know, it's a shame Roseanne was cancelled. We watched that too.

JOAN gives a sinister wink matched with a sinister stroke of violin.

INT. ANNIE'S HOME.

ANNIE's daughter CHARLIE is drawing in a notebook while lying in bed. Her mother takes the sketch. It's of Pepe the frog.
She flips to the next page. Pepe. Frantically to the next.
And the next. And the next. Pepe. Pepe. Pepe.

ANNIE (HORRIFIED):

Who...who... told you to draw these?

CHARLIE:

*CLUCK* Grandma.

ANNIE

Not in this house!

Annie chucks the notebook into the fireplace.

INT. ANNIE'S WORKSHOP

ANNIE sits at a table, shaping a tiny figurine in her hands.
She glances into the miniature house in front of her and notices that is suddenly empty of figurine people.

She slowly turns to head to see that all of the tiny people have moved outside of the house and onto the table next to it....and they're building a wall. Annie yelps and drops the figurine in her hands.

ANNIE sits on a couch in her living room, covered in sweat and trembling in utter fear. Across from her, a terrifying ghost of her dead mother stands in the corner of the room.

ANNIE (SOBBING):
Mom... Mom... How did I miss all the signs.....

A pause before ANNIE is overcome with rage and yells at her mother's ghost.
